GRADUATION

We dedicate the 2014 yearbook to Mr. Gary Brown

There was something that initially happened to Gary Brown, the aspiring teacher of English, over thirty years ago. A connection to teen students took shape when his second decade of life began to define him. After one alternative school with disadvantaged youth needed his help, he was assigned to teach at a private high school where he remained for a number of years, not only as an English teacher, but also as an advisor and coach. However, it was what came next that would begin something new and wonderful: In 1984, Old Colony happened to Gary Brown.

Mr. Brown was expected to bring his excitement of English Language Arts and literature to teens who, by and large, saw their career ambitions as their sole reason for being students. For them, writing essays, or relating to Shakespeare, had little, if any connection to using a hammer, wiring a receptacle, or styling hair. But Mr. Brown was no ordinary English teacher. He was not afraid to infuse his lessons with humor, current day events, and assignments that engaged his students, with their individual humanity always being at the center of his consciousness. And then in 1987, Old Colony beckoned Mr. Brown into the front office, where he took on the official title of Academic/Vocational Coordinator. Having been ambitious enough to cram extensive graduate education into his busy teaching years, Mr. Brown was about to bless this coveted position of school-wide responsibility with his signature compassion and down-to-earth authority. When he declared that an opened-door policy would be the norm, he was not merely paying lip service. No matter the rank, anyone--whether a fellow administrator, school committee member, faculty or staff person, student, or visitor--knew that ideas, questions, or concerns could be brought to Mr. Brown's office and be received with respect and candor. And it didn't stop there.

In 1990, when Old Colony was ready for its next Assistant Superintendent Director, Mr. Brown was the perfect fit. The long term survival of this quaint, yet powerful vocational technical high school would ultimately be determined by leadership that could administrate through changing technologies and times, governmentally imposed mandates, and budgetary restrictions, while maintaining the special family atmosphere that Old Colony had always been known for.

By the time Mr. Brown reached the end of his summit destination as Old Colony's Superintendent from 2007-2014, his leadership had given birth to his legacy. New roofing, a state-of-the-art science lab, and campus-wide energy efficiency became realities. Waiting lists for freshman applicants increased, standardized test scores ranked as high as any in the state, and student attendance remained as strong as ever. And thanks in large part to Mr. Brown, the human element at Old Colony's heart never missed a beat.

We hope that you, Mr. Brown, will discover well deserved happiness, relaxation, and recreation through the months and years ahead. Your professional leadership, kindness, humor, and humanity will be sorely missed, but your legacy surely will remain. Looking back after three decades, it was really you, Mr. Brown, who happened to Old Colony. We thank you!
